ILLINOIS State News

December relief needs for this state were fixed at $13,475,897, another high record, as the Illinois emergency relief commission dispatched a request to Washington for $12,061,388 to help meet the requirements. The total is $1,109,190 more than the estimated expenditures in November, for which month the Federal Emergency Relief administration cut $1,049,015 from its allotment. Ninety-seven per cent of the December relief funds will be federal money, since an estimated $1,061,509 which will be held over from this month came from the same source, making a total of $13,125,897. The funds held over were intended to carry out several experimental relief projects in November, chief among them the plan to transplant destitute Illinois farmers to fertile lands. These projects must now be sidetracked to meet the urgencies of ordinary relief. Only $250,000 in state funds, and $100,000 in local public funds, will be available as Illinois' contribution toward financing next month's needs, it is estimated. In its efforts to hold down December requirements, the commission ruled that there should be no increase in the work relief program which by the end of this month is expected to employ 110,000 "clients." The commission had planned to have 150,000 members of relief families on this more expensive form of dole by this time.

Under perfect organization control, the senate and house of the state legislature in special session passed Governor Horner's 2 per cent sales tax bill. The measure extends indefinitely the life of the 2 per cent retail sales or occupational tax which otherwise would expire next June 30 since the present act was passed as a temporary or emergency measure.

Governor Horner announced that State Treasurer John C. Martin of Salem will be named chairman of the state tax commission when his term expires early in January. He will succeed Scott W. Lucas of Havana, elected to fill the congressional seat of the late Speaker Henry T. Rainey.

Col. Sam T. Lawton, One Hundred and Twenty-second field artillery, Chicago, was elected president of the Illinois National Guard association at the organization's annual meeting held in Chicago. Other officers elected for the coming year were: First, second and third vice presidents, respectively: Col. Karl E. Hobart, One Hundred and Eighth combat engineers, Chicago; Col. Charles E. Davies, Two Hundred and Second coast guard, anti-aircraft, Chicago; Col. William H. Hemingway, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth infantry, Sycamore; treasurer, Maj. Dell B. Hardin, One Hundred and Twenty-third field artillery, Monmouth; and secretary, Capt. C. A. Dixon, One Hundred and Twenty-second field artillery, Chicago.

Municipal, county and state authorities in Cook, Du Page, Kane and McHenry counties are in arms against an increase in chicken thievery that has cost the farmers of this area approximately 10,000 fowl in recent months. Night raids on backyard roosts have become so common that the police can no longer view these burglaries as petty mischief. "The farmers are partly to blame for this increase in chicken stealing," said Harry P. Kelley, Kane county farm adviser. "They have been inclined to accept these prowlers as a nuisance that's part of the poultry business, just like the losses due to severe weather. Some didn't even report thefts to the police."

Illinois farmers will approve practically all the changes in the 1935 AAA corn-hog contract, it is predicted by officials of the University of Illinois college of agriculture. As one of the leading corn-hog states, Illinois had approximately 124,000 contracts in the 1934 program. Between $19,000,000 and $21,000,000 in estimated benefit payments will come to Illinois farmers if they participate in the new program approximately as they did in that for 1934, it was estimated.

Three men were drowned when the boat in which they were returning to the Illinois side of the Mississippi river near Stronghurst broke in two during a storm. Two others in the party, which had been hunting on an island, were saved. Those drowned were Guy L. Brown, forty-five, Kewanee, branch manager for the Illinois Commercial Telephone company; Earl Beardsley, fifty-five, Stronghurst shoe merchant, and Albert Berg, forty, Stronghurst mechanic.

The Galena Gazette celebrated its hundredth anniversary. A complete set of files for the century is one of that paper's chief possessions. It has not missed an issue in that time, except on holidays and Sundays.

Labor trouble was blamed for the dynamiting of the Perkins mine a mile west of Athens. The explosion threw the town into darkness. No miners were at work at the time the bomb exploded, wrecking the tippie and destroying the power line that furnished light for Athens. The blast was heard at Springfield, 16 miles away.

By a vote of 17 to 13 the executive committee of the Illinois department of the American Legion decided to hold the 1935 state convention in Quincy. The convention committee had considered Quincy but had recommended Joliet.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

PETER LISTENS FOR SOMETHING

THE leaves of the trees turned yellow and red and brown. They began to drop, a few at first, and more and more every day, until all but the spruce trees and the pine trees and the hemlock trees and the fir trees and the cedar trees were bare. The fur of Peter's coat was growing thicker. The grass of the Green Meadows had turned brown. All these things were signs which Peter knew well. They meant that rough Brother North Wind and Jack Frost were on their way down from the Far North to stay.

Peter spent a great deal of time in the dear Old Brier Patch just sitting still and listening. He didn't know what he was listening for. It just seemed to him that there was something he ought to hear at this time of year, and so he sat listening and listening and wondering what he was listening for.

Then late one afternoon there came floating down to him from high up in the sky, faintly at first, but growing louder, a sound unlike any Peter had heard all the long summer through. The sound was of many voices mingled. "Honk! Honk! Honk! Ka-honk, honk, honk, ka-honk!" they cried. Peter gave a little jump.

"That's what I've been listening for," he thought. "Honker the Goose and his friends are coming! Oh, I do hope they will stop where I can pay them a call."

He hopped out to the edge of the dear Old Brier Patch that he might see had never seen, but of which he had so often heard.

Suddenly Honker turned and headed in the direction of the Big River. Then he began to slant down, his flock following him. Presently they disappeared behind the trees along the bank of the Big River. Peter gave a happy sigh. "They are going to spend the night there," thought he. "When the moon comes up I will run over there, for then they will come ashore, and I know just where. Now that they've arrived I know that winter is not far away. Honker's voice is as sure a sign of the coming of winter as is Winsome Bluebird's that Spring will soon be here."

QUESTION BOX By ED WYNN... The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I went into a restaurant the other day and ordered some "liver and bacon." The waitress brought me some bacon, but said I would have to wait for my liver until after the two o'clock at the next table were served. What answer have you for that?

Truly yours,
PHIL HARMONIC.

Answer: That is the toughest question I've had, but I've worked it out. The two men must have ordered before you placed your order. They probably ordered liver, the same as you. She served them first because she didn't want you to have your "liver out of order."

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I just arrived in town today and noticed some signs on the lamp post. I am a little nearsighted and cannot see what are on the signs. Can you tell me what they are for and why they are up so high?

Yours truly,
I. VORY.

Answer: They are put on top of the lamp posts so that people passing will see them. You are supposed to climb up the post and read the sign. If it says "fresh paint" then you know you shouldn't lean against the post.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am keeping company with a young woman who is very fond of horses. I am thinking of marrying her. Every one tells me a woman who loves horses will make a good wife. Do you believe that?

Sincerely,
I. M. A. BOOB.

Answer: All I can say is that it is true a woman loves anything she can drive.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am a married man with three children. I keep working but seem unable to make both ends meet. What shall I do?

Sincerely,
AL. TRUISTIC.

Answer: That's easy. If you can't make both ends meet, make one vegetable.

Portrait of One Business Man

By ANNE CAMPBELL

THEY say in business he plays chess. He takes no stock in happiness, Or the well being or the hope Of those who work for him, and grope Back to the light of day again. The boss plays chess. . . . His pawns are men.

He sits aloof from those who try To please him, with a wary eye Upon his interests, . . . and feels Himself a man of high ideals. With no thought but of gain, he plays A game of stalling and delays.

I think there is a Power that sees His many needless cruelties, And sometime, though the years are long, That bait the weak, and feed the strong, The Boss will hear, as lights grow dim: "Checkmate!" . . . It will be said to him!

half cupful of bread crumbs, salt, pepper and a tablespoonful of butter; mix well. Fill six medium-sized onions and top each with a mushroom cap. Put into a baking dish with a little water, cover and bake in a moderate oven about one hour. Remove the cover the last 15 minutes and brown. They are delicious without mushrooms, or with a bit of sausage.

Walnut and Salmon Salad.

Putting State Heroes on the Skids

STATUES of state heroes in Statuary hall, in the Capitol at Washington, were becoming too numerous and too heavy for safety, so to relieve the strain it was ordered that thirty of them be removed to other quarters. The illustration shows the removal of John Hanson who, according to Marylanders, was the first President of the United States.

HOW TO SHOOT

By Bob Nichols

Shooting Editor, Field and Stream

MANY good shots prefer the single-barrel gun. Guns in this class are the pump-gun, the automatic, and also the so-called "over-and-under." The last named is really a double-barrel gun. But its barrels are superimposed, one on top of the other, so that it offers the single-barrel alignment of the true single-tube guns such as the pump and auto-loader.

The reason they give for their preference is that the single tube is easier and quicker to aim. And more accurate to aim.

In my opinion, this preference is largely imaginary. I, too, shoot the single-tube gun and prefer it to the double-barrel. But I have tested myself time and again on the skeet field and find that I shoot just as well with either type of gun.

The single-barrel shooter's most commonly expressed objection to the double-barrel gun is that the twin barrels confuse him and cause him to "cross-fire." What he means is that his eye unconsciously lines up either one of the barrels, usually the left barrel in the case of a right-handed shooter, instead of lining up the center of the gun on the target. Obviously, if your eye is unconsciously aiming the left barrel of a double-barrel, the chances are that you will almost certainly shoot behind the flying target.

My answer to the single-tube versus the double-barrel gun controversy is this: If you are so conscious of your gun that two tubes out there instead of only one confuses you—then I say you are paying too much attention to your gun, and you are not shooting a shotgun the way a shotgun should be shot!

In the first place, your eyes should be at "universal focus." In other words, your eyes, both wide open, should be aware of everything in a fairly wide field of vision. Roughly, I should say that about 60 per cent of your vision should be concentrated on the target, about 30 per cent on the gun, and about 10 per cent dispersed over an area perhaps ten yards on both sides of the target. I think this proportion is very nearly correct for shots in the open.

Note the great advantage of this, say in quail hunting for instance. Your faithful old dog stands on rigid point. You walk in carefully and flush the covey. Up they go with a roar. With your eyesight correctly proportioned to the first bird you pick out, to your gun, and to the remaining birds—you quickly knock down your first shot, swing like a flash on the second, which your 10 per cent vision makes you keenly aware of, and if you are quick enough in your gun handling and are shooting a repeater you may even get in a third shot. And after all the shooting's over you know where the main body of the birds went and you can immediately start for the right patch of cover to begin taking your singles.

The man who uses too much of his vision in watching his gun—or the man who shoots with one eye closed—can't begin to do this. After the first shot he is floundering, and when his eyes finally focus on the second bird he needs the range of a full-choke barrel to catch it—and the third shot on the rise is almost impossible. Moreover, usually he will be in the dark as far as knowing where all the rest of the birds flew to.

For the frequent shot one gets in thick woods and brush—especially on grouse, and quite often on quail—here I think the really good shot seldom sees his gun. His vision is concentrated about 80 per cent on the target and 20 per cent dispersed over an area around and ahead of the target. This is called the "snap" shot. It is pure, instinctive gun pointing. It can be extremely accurate. But it should be used only in emergency—never in open country where easy, deliberate aiming is possible. For the deliberate aim is the surest killer.

Denmark's Bicycle Rider

Always Has Right of Way

In Denmark, writes Harry A. Franck in "A Scandinavian Summer," the bicycle always has the right of way. There are no exceptions and no excuses. Automobile drivers who dislike dodging bicycles ought certainly to leave their cars behind when they visit the little land of the Danes. True, most two-wheeled riders there usually hold out a hand to right or left when about to swerve from a straightforward route—so habitually, in fact, that many Danes unconsciously do so even on foot! and not a bad idea at that. But a cyclist may cut in from either side at any time on any street or road.

An excellent highway runs up the east coast of the island of Zealand, from Copenhagen to Hamlet's Elsinore and the popular sea beach beyond. But it is not open to automobiles on Sundays during the summer.

The constant motionless sailing through the air of solemn faced people on bicycles—high-hatted ministers of the church, frock-tailed ministers of the government, haughty ladies in limousine garb, stodgy old ladies from the country, waiters in full dress, irrespective of the hour of the day—is one of the principal sights of Denmark, its most distinguishing characteristic. Out in the country old peasant women whom you would never suspect of mounting anything more unseemly than a rocking chair, sedately and noiselessly glide past on bicycles.

Do YOU Know—

That "chop suey" is unknown in China—except in a few semi-foreign restaurants. It was "invented" and named in the Southern Pacific railroad camps in America, more than half a century ago. A cook for Chinese workmen threw in a little of everything and called it "chop suey."

"Glory Hunter"

Gen. Geo. A. Custer

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HIM it is written: "He followed Glory all his days. He was her lifelong devotee. She gave him favor withheld from most men, and denied herself when his need of her was sorest. When, desperately pursuing, he died on the heights above the Little Big Horn, Glory, the perverse, relented and gave eternal brilliance to his name."

So begins chapter one of a new "now-it-can-be-told" biography—Frederic F. Van De Water's "Glory Hunter," published recently by the Bobbs-Merrill company. The "Glory Hunter" was "George Armstrong Custer, Lieutenant-Colonel, 7th United States Cavalry, Brevet Major-General, United States Army, the 'Boy General with the Golden Locks,' the 'Murat of the American Army,' the good sword, the hero, the martyr."

Around his name has raged endless controversy, for he was the kind of man who seems to have been capable of inspiring either the bitterest hatred or the blindest loyalty. Chief among the exemplars of the latter was, of course, his wife, "who was to devote the rest of her life to adornment of her husband's memory." Long before his tragic death in 1876 there were those who had reason to hate him but chose to hold their tongues. After that event there were whisperers of suspicion but little, if any, full-voiced denunciation.

"Elizabeth Bacon's fifty-odd years of glorification have enshrined her husband in the folk-lore of America. She proclaimed him hero and, since she was his widow, men who thought otherwise held their peace." Last spring she died, as did Gen. E. S. Godfrey, another staunch defender of Custer's name. Therefore a "now-it-can-be-told" biography can appear without giving pain to these two honored devotees to a partly true legend.

If, indeed, as the poet tells us, the child is father to the man, then several incidents in the childhood of the boy who was born in New Rumley, Harrison county, Ohio, just 95 years ago (December 5, 1839) are significant of the man he was to become. When war with Mexico threatened, his father, Emanuel Custer, joined the "New Rumley Invincibles," a militia company, and provided his little son, "Autie," with a miniature replica of his uniform. One day the youngster amazed his father by lifting his arm in imitation of an older half-brother who had been "speaking a piece" at school and declaiming in his boyish treble "My voice is for war!" For the next 30 years "Autie" Custer's voice was to be raised for war—to be heard in a "wild shrill whooping in the forefront of a hundred cavalry charges."

The Custers were staunch Jacksonian Democrats even though their community was predominantly Whig. One day Emanuel Custer took his four-year-old son to the doctor to have a tooth pulled. As they left the office, the boy gave a bloody grin and, apropos of nothing, exclaimed: "Father, you and me can lick all the Whigs in Ohio." In 1876 he felt the same way about the Sioux in Montana and he died because of that belief.

When he was four years old a new brother arrived in the Custer home—Nevin J., who is worthy of mention if for no other reason than that he was so different from the rest. He lived and died in peace, a farmer. Thomas W. Custer appeared on the scene in 1845, Boston Custer in 1848 and Margaret Emma Custer in 1852. They, especially Tom Custer, became the first hero-worshippers to send their older brother on his pursuit of glory and they were to share in the tragic end of his quest, as was his half-sister, Lydia, who in 1849 married David Reed of Monroe, Mich. When she went to the little pioneer town on the shores of Lake Michigan, she took "Autie" with her. He lived there off and on for the next six or seven years and there he met the girl, Elizabeth Bacon, whom he was to marry 10 years later.

Returning to New Rumley again, Custer took the first step in his glory-seeking career. Despite his father's strong Democratic principles and consequent disapproval of his son's actions, Custer was not averse to asking a Republican congressman to get him an appointment to the United States Military Academy at West Point. Unsuccessful at first, Custer was so importunate that finally John A. Bingham, the congressman, gave it to him and on June 3, 1857, he entered West Point. There he was "a defiant insubordinate cadet, forever in trouble and as constantly on the verge of more. . . . The impartial voice of the Academy records portrays George Armstrong Custer as a slovenly soldier and a deplorable student." The approaching crisis of the Civil war resulted in the academy's five-year course being compressed into four and two classes were graduated in 1861—one in April and another in June. Custer was in the latter group, his standing being thirty-fourth in a class of thirty-four.

"Two years of campaigning would turn West Point's indifferent slob into a soldier," writes Van De Water. "It would not change his substance. Battle that reconstructed others, sobering and deepening their spirits, would only sharpen George Armstrong Custer. He would become a keen weapon, terrible to the enemy, difficult for a weak superior to wield, yet intrinsically he would remain the raucous and reckless youngster who had defied his parents to clasp the hand of a political foe and had been the Academy's chronic insurgent. His nature was bright and volatile, yet durable past the power even of war to alter."

It was during these two years that the tradition of "Custer's luck" began. For nothing else but luck could have made him a brigadier-general at the age of twenty-three, the youngest in the army. . . . At least, the historians have never been able to find any good reason why in 1862 he should have been advanced from a first lieutenant in the Fifth cavalry to the command of the Second brigade of the Third division, rocketing past the ranks of captain, major, lieutenant-colonel and colonel. True, he distinguished himself in a wild charge at Gettysburg but at least twice thereafter he narrowly escaped annihilation at the hands of that cavalry genius in gray, Jeb Stuart.

The appointment of Phil Sheridan as chief of the Union cavalry gave Custer his chance for fame. "It was Sheridan who overlooked insubordinations by Custer with unwonted charity. . . . Here was no strategist but a tireless body and a mind as hungry for war as a bent bow. Custer was a weapon that Sheridan knew how to use." He used him in the raids which devastated the Shenandoah valley where Custer seems to have learned willingly enough the lessons of ruthlessness so necessary to those who engage in the dirty business of making war.

By the spring of 1865 he had become a major-general and it was "Custer's luck" again which enabled him to be "in at the death." For it was Custer and his cavalry who swooped down upon Appomattox Station and slammed shut the door to Lee's only avenue of retreat. After Lee's surrender, Custer issued the oft-quoted congratulatory general order to his Third division, whose record, he declared, was "unparalleled in the annals of war."

"This is more ornate but scarcely more accurate than other battlefield proclamations," says his biographer, whose calm analysis of the record shows that it was much less remarkable than the hero-worshippers would have us believe. While admitting that Custer was a "fair tactician and a smart disciplinarian . . . and as physically valiant a man as ever drew sword," a summing up of the evidence leads inevitably to the conclusion that George Armstrong Custer had few, if any, of the qualities which make a really great commander and it is doubtful if he can be set down as an outstanding cavalry leader in the same class with Stuart and Forrest of the Confederate army or Sheridan, Merritt and Torbert of the Union army.

His weaknesses as a commander became even more apparent in his Indian fighting days than in his Civil war career. When he became lieutenant-colonel of the newly organized Seventh cavalry and busied himself with molding that outfit into what he believed a cavalry regiment should be, the strict discipline which he enforced and his callous disregard for the welfare of his men brought him close to disaster. In September, 1867, he was court-martialed at Fort Leavenworth on seven charges, the most serious being that he had deliberately disobeyed orders of his superior officer, General Hancock, had deserted his command in the midst of hostile Indian country to hurry to Fort Riley where the cholera was raging and from which his beloved wife was writing letters filled with loneliness and terror and that he had ordered some of his officers to shoot down without mercy deserters from the regiment.

Former Custer biographers have either ignored or passed lightly over this court martial, but the fact remains that Custer was found guilty on all seven charges, suspended from rank and command for a year and his pay for that time forfeited. But before the year had passed Sheridan, who had more than once overlooked Custer's insubordination, came to his rescue.

The result was the "battle" of the Washita fought on November 17, 1868, when Custer attacked the sleeping camp of the Cheyenne chief, Black Kettle, killing that chief and slaughtering men, women and children indiscriminately. There is every reason to believe that Black Kettle and his people were no more hostile than they had been when members of this same band were the victims of Colonel Chivington and his Colorado troops at the Sand Creek massacre. But Sheridan's orders were, in effect, to "kill Indians" and Custer didn't stop to find out whether the village into which he charged that cold November morning was occupied by friendly or hostile Indians.

His tactics at the Washita were the same as those which brought disaster less than ten years later—a division of his command and a headlong attack on an "enemy" whose numbers were unknown. But he soon found that he had stirred up a hornet's nest, for Black Kettle's village was only one of several along the Washita. Threatened by warriors from the others, Custer hastily withdrew, even though Maj. Joel Elliott and 19 men in his detachment were still unaccounted for. Lieutenant Godfrey had reported hearing sounds of firing which indicated that Elliott was in distress. But Custer disregarded this and marched away, leaving Elliott to his fate.

His hasty withdrawal indicates that he had lost for the moment, at least, his belief that the Seventh could whip all the Indians on the plains. But he lost something else at the Washita—the undivided faith and admiration of the regiment and the confidence of some of his officers. From that time on the Seventh cavalry was a regiment divided against itself. Nor during the next eight years was Custer able to do anything which restored that shattered faith.

During the Yellowstone expedition of 1873 he had one run-in with his superior officer, General Stanley, and received a severe rebuke which caused him to be good thereafter—at least, so far as obeying orders was concerned. But he did rush into one reckless fight with the Sioux which nearly ended disastrously for him and which gave him a dangerous scorn for the Sioux as foemen. His expedition into the Black Hills in 1874 and his exaggerated reports of the richness of the gold there brought him a fleeting moment of fame, but this was soon overshadowed by the disgrace which overtook him when he became embroiled in the Belknap scandal.

Belknap, President Grant's secretary of war, was accused of graft in connection with sutler contracts at the army posts and impeached by congress. Custer "talked too much"—claimed knowledge which he did not have. Summoned to Washington to testify, he made a sorry witness. He was even so rash as to involve the President's brother, Orville Grant, in charges which he could not prove and to insinuate guilty knowledge of frontier graft by the President himself.

Naturally Grant resented all this. So Custer was not only deprived of the command of the expedition which was to be sent against the hostile Sioux from Fort Abraham Lincoln in North Dakota but was even forbidden to go with it. He made frenzied appeals to Sherman, commander in chief of the army, to Alfonso Taft, the new secretary of war, and to Grant himself. But none of them availed and this time not even his friend, Sheridan, could help him. Finally he appealed to General Terry, who was to command the expedition, and it was Terry who succeeded in getting him restored to the head of his regiment. It will be seen later how Custer repaid that favor.

Chief among the points in the controversy that has raged about Custer's defeat and death on the Little Big Horn is the question of whether or not he deliberately disobeyed Terry's orders, thereby breaking up a plan of campaign against the Indians which might have been successful. Van De Water's conclusion is that he did deliberately disobey, that he intended from the first to "swing clear of Terry" and by winning a smashing victory over the Sioux to regain favor with his superiors. So the Glory Hunter gambled—and lost!

When he lost he brought death not only to himself but to more than 300 others. And among them were three of his own blood—Capt. Tom Custer, a troop commander in the Seventh, Boston Custer and "Autie" Reed, the son of his half-sister, Lydia, who had been a "second mother" to him. Another of the Custer clan whose life was to be blighted by what took place on June 25, 1876, was his sister, Margaret Emma Custer, the wife of Lieut. James Calhoun, who perished on the hill above the Little Big Horn.

Lesson for December 9

THE CHRISTIAN AS TEACHER

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 7:24-29;
Acts 18:24-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.—II Timothy 2:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Our Teacher.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Great Teacher.INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Learning From the Master Teacher.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Teaching Church.

It seems that the lesson committee decided upon a title and then sought texts to fit it. It is very difficult, if not impossible, to make the texts fit the title. Regardless of the strained effort required to make this adjustment, two vitally practical Scripture passages are before us from which to set forth vital truths. The following practical lesson plan is suggested.

I. Jesus the Master Teacher (Matt. 7:24-29).

1. His method of teaching (vv. 24-27). In his application of the so-called Sermon on the Mount Jesus used a most striking simile, namely, the two foundations.

a. The house built on a rock (vv. 24-25). This house endured the storms and flood because of its secure and abiding foundation. The wise builder will see to it that a safe foundation is provided before he proceeds to erect his house.

b. The house built on the sand (vv. 26-27). This house collapsed with the impact of the storms and flood because its foundation was insecure. The foolish builder is the man who proceeds to build his house without consideration of the importance of the foundation.

By house in this figure is doubtless meant human life and character. And by rock is meant the teachings of Christ. Every man is building a house. The fact of building is true of every human being. The supreme difference is not in the men who build or the material used in the building, but in the foundation upon which they build. The foundation determines everything so far as man's destiny is concerned. A time of testing will surely come to every life. The matter of importance is as to whether we are building upon the foundation which will withstand the coming storms and flood. The one who builds upon the words of Jesus Christ is eternally secure.

2. The impression made (vv. 28-29). The people were astonished. The content of Christ's teaching as well as his manner of teaching was in contrast with that of the scribes. The teaching of the scribes consisted in the repetition of the words of others, while Christ's teaching was in his own words. The Christian teacher should give forth a positive and certain message because he sets forth the inerrant and eternal words of Christ the living God.

II. Apollos the Teacher Who Needed to Be Taught (Acts 18:24-28).

Apollos is a striking example of many Christian leaders today. Many are gifted, energetic, and highly trained, and yet are ignorant of the real Christian message and Pentecostal grace.

1. Who he was (v. 24). He was an Alexandrian Jew, highly cultured, carefully instructed in the Old Testament Scriptures, energetic and eloquent. He was a believer in Jesus Christ, even familiar with his life and teaching.

2. What he lacked (v. 25). He was only a disciple of John the Baptist. He was therefore ignorant of the meaning of Christ's death, resurrection, ascension, and the gift of the Spirit as outpoured at Pentecost. There are striking parallels to this today in the Christian church. We have many good men eloquent and highly cultured who know only "the baptism of John." They insist upon the integrity of men in public life, social justice, and even call upon men to repent of their sins, but they seem to know nothing of the meaning of the death of Christ, the necessity of the new birth by the Spirit, and the Pentecostal gift. They are pleading for social justice and a higher standard of ethics, seemingly not knowing that these are by-products of the gospel and are meaningless and impossible without the proclamation of the gospel of Christ which centers in the person and work of the divine Saviour.

3. Who instructed Apollos (v. 26). Priscilla and Aquila, humble Christian tent-makers, were instrumental in showing the great preacher his ignorance and leading him into the truth.

4. Result of his ministry (vv. 27-28). He was provided with credentials and had a fruitful ministry. He mightily convinced the Jews showing that Jesus was the Messiah.

FIRST AMERICAN ALMSHOUSE BUILT IN PHILADELPHIA

When William Penn first sailed for America, on the ship Welcome, he left a letter addressed to his wife and children in which he said:

"Pity the distressed and hold out a hand of help to them; it may be your case; and as you mete to others God will mete to you again."

The "Friends" who came with Penn to this country, which was to be the "haven of rest for the oppressed of all nations," were no doubt men of sterling qualities; they believed in the sentiments expressed in the letter left by Penn with his wife and children. It is, therefore, not surprising that the first almshouse established in the Colonies was that of the Friends.

A few years after the landing of Penn in 1634 he conveyed to one John Martin, tailor by trade and member of the Society of Friends, two Philadelphia city lots, each 51 feet by 200 feet, on the south side of Walnut street, between "Delaware, Third and Fourth streets." John Martin died in 1702, leaving his two city lots to the monthly meeting of the Society of Friends, expressing the wish they should be disposed of in any way the monthly meeting saw fit for the use of poor members of the Society of Friends.

The monthly meeting accepted the gift, and eleven years later, in 1713, when the need of a house of refuge for poor and aged Friends became evident, decided to use "John Martin's lots on Walnut street, as a site for an almshouse."

The Voice of the American Legion

By The Tinley Park Post No. 615

UNIVERSAL SERVICE

The American Legion, after 15 years of groundwork, will seek national legislation to insure universal service of the country's man power and industry in war time.

To build a country so defensively strong that no nation would dare attack, and to take the profit from war if it should come, the Legion will ask that three broad principles be moulded into the law of the land:

1. National conscription in war time.
2. The "freezing" of prices, profits, wages and salaries at a pre-war level so that private gain could not result from the national emergency.
3. Adoption of a fair and equitable plan for utilization of all resources in the national conflict with out special profit or privilege.

TO MAINTAIN LAW AND ORDER

It takes an aroused citizenship to enforce the law. It is well to furnish our officers with the latest equipment, but if we leave it entirely up to them we will still have gangsters. We have just the type of law enforcement we want. If our sheriff arrests men for crimes committed and does his best to produce the necessary evidence to convict them, and the District Attorney does all in his power to convict them, yet the jury turns them loose, what more can be done? Or if the jury convicts and the verdict is sustained by the highest court and the man goes to the pen but is turned out by the Governor, not because all the officers and courts erred, and an innocent man was incarcerated but because he and his friends had, according to common reports, the stipulated price for a pardon, then what has been accomplished?

It is time to take steps to "Maintain Law and Order" and we believe we are entering that era. It is time to "Uphold and Defend the Constitution of the United States" and we believe that is the conviction of Mr. Aroused Citizen—he is even willing to increase the Army and Navy.

And in speaking of law enforcement, the most effective thing is to remove the root of crime, destroy the soil which produces criminals—ignorance and poverty. Children reared in homes of squalor and want are, in many instances, brought into the world with criminal tendencies, and in surroundings which instill criminal thought into them from the beginning.

CHALLENGE WASTE

Every Legionnaire—yes, every citizen—has a continuing duty to perform in this regard. Here it is: Every time you, and you, see a dollar wasted in government, whether municipal, county, state or federal, for the love of our disabled comrades, do something about it. Let us be effective citizens in this regard. Let us bring forth into the light of day any example of waste or graft or miscarriage of justice that we may personally come to know. Let's see that every dollar spent in any government activity, a dollar, maybe, that was saved at the cost of suffering, goes further and does more than any dollar did before in government. Let's get rid of the "gold brick" in government, whoever he may be and where ever he may be found.

STILL GIVING THEIR BLOOD

Legionnaires—who shed their blood for the preservation of others lives and liberties are still carrying on. A physician reported to Alban-Park Post 124 that a patient, one of their comrades, was dying for lack of virile blood. Six members of the post immediately volunteered for transfusions and their benefitted comrade, Samuel Herrick, is recovering nicely. That exemplifies the last clause in the Legion preamble.

Every time one man puts a new idea across he finds ten men who thought of it before he did—but they only thought.

The honeymoon was over and the young newweds were having their first battle.

"And another thing," said the irate groom. "Did you tell your parents that you married me for my money?"

"Yes!" replied the belligerent young bride. "I had to give them some excuse!"

Jack Gardner, from down in Dallas, tells about a colored farm boy from out near Waco, who came to town with his forty dollars cron money to see the sights. He finally wound up in "Deep Elm" (the Harlem of Dallas), where some of the local talent showed him some tricks with the little ivory warfare workers. In time the farm boy decided there was something wrong and started a "ruckus" which landed the party in the police station.

The police sergeant, an ex-army top kicker, examined the instruments of play and found they were loaded. Turning to the Waco Negro, he asked:

"If I get your money back for you, will you catch the next inter-urban down yonder to Waco?"

"Cap'n, if you'll gimme mah money an' turn me loose, I'll ketch de one what's done gone!"

Don't allow yourself to become nervous. Take Dr. Miles Nervine. It will relax your tense nerves and let you get a good night's sleep.

Irritability, Restlessness, Sleeplessness, often lead to Nervous Headache, Nervous Indigestion, Hysteria—sometimes to a nervous breakdown and organic trouble.

Some of the people, whose letters are printed below, were as nervous as you are—possibly more so—yet they have found relief.

Three years ago I was so nervous I could not bear to go out in company and could not sleep nights. A friend recommended Dr. Miles Nervine. I now enjoy myself thoroughly and sleep every night. Miss Juliette Currier, New Market, N. H.

The Timely Tomato

HAVE you heard about the new canned creamed soups—tomato, green pea, celery, asparagus and others? They are made of selected fresh, ripe, vegetables, all grown under supervision, contain a generous amount of rich cream, and the result is a most delectable smoothness and flavor. Several firms now make them, so you can take your choice.

But, if you are more inclined to compound your own soups, you'll find the tomato a timely and invaluable ally. Here's the way, for instance, to make

Tomato Bouillon with Okra: Combine the contents of a 12½-ounce can of tomato juice and a can of bouillon and the liquor from a 1-pound can of asparagus tips (reserving the tips to be used in a salad or in asparagus Hollandaise).

Add one cup water, one-half of the contents of a 9-ounce can of okra, thinly sliced, salt and pepper to taste, a few drops of lemon juice. Heat thoroughly and serve in cups. Serves eight.

An Unusual Soup

And here's an unusual soup which tastes good in December and also in the other eleven months of the year:

Tomato Oatmeal Soup: Combine the contents of a No. 2 can of tomatoes, one tablespoon sugar, one and one-fourth teaspoons salt, one-fourth teaspoon pepper-corns, two slices onion and two cups water, and bring to boiling. Add four tablespoons quick-cooking oatmeal, and cook gently for thirty minutes. Strain and serve. Serves four.*

Who writes those sloppy letters to Evelyn Moore. For whom is Grace Warning willing to cook 365 days out of the year? What snappy 8th grade farmer gal puts Howard Jungles "Hat on the side of his head"? Does Bertha Lena Lillwitz still get the "funniest feeling" when she goes past Erickson's? Why does Dorothy Hall blush when Geo. Megarry smiles at her? Does Bernice Hostert go right home when she leaves Steele's?

The Swiss Answer Back
Wise Mrs. Roosevelt
Our Trade Balance
This Is Good News

Switzerland is small but takes nothing "lying down." Every Swiss of fighting age is a reserve member of the Swiss army, with a rifle and ammunition that he can use. That encourages independence. Europe knows that it would cost more to conquer Switzerland than Switzerland would be worth. In addition, nobody would know how to run Swiss hotels, except the Swiss. Recently Dr. Carl Barth, Swiss professor of theology at Bonn university, to which the former German kaiser was sent as a boy, was dismissed by Prussia's minister of culture, because Doctor Barth would not take the oath of personal loyalty to Hitler.

The Swiss government takes that up promptly, saying to Germany: "If you dismiss a Swiss teacher for political reasons, the Swiss government will immediately send home all German professors in Swiss universities." No hemming and hawing there.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wise and energetic lady, advises giving small children as young as six or seven a weekly allowance, because it teaches them to be independent. They learn how to spend, when to save, what to pay, and grow up independent, self-reliant individuals.

That is a good thought that some wise professors high up in government might adopt.

If it is wise to teach individual independence to young children, why not encourage it in grown-up Americans, instead of training them to spend the rest of their lives in any NRA baby carriage?

Again there is cheerfulness. United States exports since October were highest in three years. Uncle Sam sold $206,352,000 worth of goods to other countries, $76,723,000 less than he took in.

That is called a "favorable trade balance," and is supposed to be a good thing.

Abstain, omen, but the French revolution started at a time when France, for the first time in a long while, found herself exporting more than she bought.

Edsel Ford, son of Henry, and a great help to his father as president of the Ford company, dined with President Roosevelt in Warm Springs, Ga., and told him the nation is "out of the trough."

The two Fords are good judges of returning prosperity. They expect to sell at least 1,000,000 other "Fords" this coming year.

Winthrop W. Aldrich, head of the New York Chase National bank, biggest private bank in the world, tells reporters in Seattle: "Business men and bankers in all the cities we have visited believe that there has been a real improvement since September."

Prosperity is climbing up, according to Mr. Aldrich, and he ought to know. He has on hand more than a billion dollars that he will gladly lend you, if you can prove your ability to pay it back.

Samuel Insull and sixteen co-defendants are acquitted of using the mails to defraud. A majority of the jury, which took two hours to decide, voted for acquittal from the start.

Apparently Mr. Insull might have avoided that tiring trip to Greece.

There is war talk with a meaning in Europe. Hungary is filled with rage because Yugoslavia accuses Hungarians of plotting the murder of King Alexander. The Hungarians are fighters, but not murderers.

England and France are agitated by alleged news that Germany is arming with all possible speed, regardless of the Versailles treaty.

There are a dozen causes for war floating around Europe, and no particular cause for peace, except that no nation could well afford another war—Uncle Sam's pockets being tightly buttoned, at present.

Senator Nye, an earnest man, devoted to peace, but not at "any price," asks the big United Aircraft company just what it has in mind in its constant expansion in production and betterment of airplanes. The senator seems to fear that United Aircraft has in mind the possibility of war.

Let us all hope that it has exactly that in mind, and that a government showing little energy or initiative of its own in air defense will at least appreciate help from private initiative.

New Jersey draws a panel of 150, 03 of them women, for the Lindbergh kidnapping and murder trial. The authorities, without being specific, say they have evidence against Bruno Richard Hauptmann not revealed to the public. Hauptmann's lawyers would probably prefer all men on the jury. Women feel more keenly than men do about kidnapping children.

When President Roosevelt says he means to give the people of the United States cheap power, he means it. At Warm Springs he has been working on "a broad national program" for cheaper power. It is understood that he will not be "too drastic," but he will give the people what they need.

Next in importance to free air and free water is cheap power.

Physical Fitness Needed for Athletic Achievement

Second down . . . and 7 yards to go! The referee blows his whistle. It's a forward pass! Jones is dropping back for it . . . he's under it . . . he's . . .!

"TRYING OUT this year, Jim?"
"I'll say I am!"
"Well, you're sure to make the first team. I wish I had your chance."
"I hope I do make it. You know, Bob, I've worked hard to get this way. I went out to my Uncle Ben's farm and worked in the fields all summer—got up with the chickens and went to bed with the sun. Coach told me he'd give me another chance if I'd get in shape."

"Gosh, talk about muscles! Have you shown those biceps to Dolly Reynolds yet?"

"No, but I'll show you what they can do if you don't—"

In hundreds of schools the above scene (with variations) takes place each year. Almost every boy who enters the elementary grades or high school does so with the hope that he will reach the acme of achievement—a place on a team. With the many varied athletics offered in the school program today there are few boys who cannot find for themselves a sport in which to participate. Some will excel in several things; others will occupy only a small niche in the general physical education group.

In comparison to the number of boys who answer the call for candidates, only a relatively small number get the coveted berths on the first team. The question then arises—why do some succeed where others fail? The answer is simple. Those who succeed are ready; the others are not. The successful ones were first of all physically fit. They undoubtedly knew the rules of the game and how to apply them. Through training and practice they had probably perfected themselves at the business of doing the right thing in the right way at the right time.

Physical fitness is mentioned first because it is first in importance. Coaches put their teams under strict training rules because they realize the necessity of building strong bodies and alert minds. Those training rules stress plenty of sleep, no smoking, no stimulants, and a nutritious diet consisting of fruit, vegetables, and fresh pasteurized milk.

Why, then, should not such rules be applied by all boys, and girls too, to keep themselves in condition for the contests met in daily life.

Such a contest—Autumn—is just ahead. Is this season to be a friend or an enemy? Friend to healthy boys and girls who can get out of doors and enjoy the fall sports, the crisp cold air, the mellow autumn twilight, the many rains; enemy to weak bodies who take cold at the first whiff of wintry air, get the sniffles with each shower, and are always too cold to see what's happening on the football field. Don't let autumn get into your bones. With radiant health as a weapon, conquer it! Make this fall season serve you with every gay event that's tucked away in those jolly months.

Proper Health Habits Begin Early in Child's School Life

Fresh vegetables, such as those shown above, served in soups, creamed or baked make delightful and nutritious lunches for the school child. A glass of milk should complete each meal.

THOUSANDS of little men and little women supplied with pencil, ruler and tablet are starting out this month to begin school days. Some go forth joyously, some reluctantly, some anxiously, some eagerly. But whatever the child's attitude, whatever the parents' preparation, a child's first year in school is a period of strenuous readjustment, when he must learn not only to obey without question and to be considerate of others, but to control himself. Primary teachers trained for their work realize the importance of getting these little people started right. They are quick to take advantage of receptive minds and childish confidences; they are just as cautious to substitute good habits for less desirable ones.

First graders are surprisingly self-confident, and on the whole they are very agreeable. That is why the teaching of proper health habits begins in the primary grades and is carried out throughout the school years. It has been found that demonstrating to little children the proper brush movement for cleaning teeth can be made into a fascinating game, just as can be the matter of being weighed and measured each month or keeping a chart on the amount of fresh milk, fruit, and vegetables taken as a part of the daily diet.

The first year in school provides an excellent foundation for the inculcation of health habits that will be followed throughout a person's lifetime.

However, the teacher cannot hope to accomplish the best results alone. She must rely to a great extent upon the co-operation of the parents to see that the teachings of the school room are made the regular procedure of the home. Parents can help immeasurably by providing for their children the proper foods to build up their bodies, chiefly fruits, vegetables, fresh pasteurized milk, eggs, butter, cereals, etc., and insisting upon the correct amount of sleep in a well-ventilated room. No one, child or adult, can do good work if he is suffering from an attack of indigestion or an aching tooth. Regular inspection of a child's teeth by the dentist, daily brushing, and sound teeth building foods will remove one of the most common defects among children—poor teeth.

Another way to help the work of readjustment is to send the child to school fortified with a good substantial breakfast that will see him through the morning and to have a nutritious luncheon ready for him at noon so that he returns to the afternoon session with appetite satisfied and energy restored. After school a slice of bread with butter and a glass of milk and several hours of play in the open sunshine will relax his mind and muscles.

Health habits such as these, begun early and carried on through school days will result not only in healthy men and women, but well trained and mentally alert men and women.

Out of the Fountain of Youth

HEALTH IMPORTANT TO GOOD APPEARANCE

ISN'T it true that almost invariably when selecting a piece of fruit to eat—say an apple—most every one reaches for the reddest, smoothest, most perfect looking apple in the dish? Why? Because its very appearance shows that it is a good one, round and firm; it has no bad spots; it is properly ripened.

Such may be the case with people. Those whose bodies are too thin or too stout show improper development, those whose complexions are muddy, sallow, or blemished show a lack of certain elements in the diet. Doesn't it hold true that if people unconsciously choose the most attractive looking piece of fruit the same standard of choice will carry over in their dealings with other people?

Health is perhaps the most important factor in appearance. The finest gown or suit of clothes will not enhance a figure that is without vitality—has no pep. No color in hat or gown will perform miracles for one's appearance if the eyes are dull and lifeless and the complexion marked by ugly splotches. But even the most drab costume will take on added beauty if it sets off a body alive with radiant health.

Frequently lassitude and lack of vitality are directly traceable to faulty diet. Heavy, rich, greasy foods make one feel heavy and sluggish. Fresh, crisp, country fruits and vegetables, and fresh pasteurized milk—give that feeling of youth and buoyancy so desirable to every one.

HEALTH IMPORTANT FOR TRUE BEAUTY

"KEEP Young and Beautiful," is the title of one of last year's most popular songs. Today it is forgotten in favor of a newer one, but the idea put across in that song will never be old or forgotten. "Keep Young and Beautiful, if you want to be loved . . ."—and who doesn't? However, some persons may feel that such advice is easier given than followed. To some extent, perhaps this is true, but entirely? NO! Of course, to change the shape of one's face or features or figure is not always possible or wise, but to alter contours is possible and often very wise.

A pretty face does not alone constitute beauty according to present-day standards. We are prone to admire the well groomed person, one whose whole being is aglow with health, whose teeth and eyes sparkle, whose figure is slender and well proportioned, whose complexion is clear and radiant. Such beauty is not a gift of nature wholly, but chiefly a matter of diet and sane living.

Young girls have an excellent opportunity to lay the foundation of attractive appearance throughout a lifetime by following a plan of diet including an abundance of fresh fruits, vegetables, and fresh pasteurized milk, getting plenty of sleep and out-of-door exercise, and taking proper care of the teeth. By starting now before any traces of age begin to show in the face or figure, youth can be retained.

BUILD RESISTANCE TO WINTER COLDS

DURING the fall and winter it is almost impossible to avoid entirely exposure to colds, but it is quite possible to build up one's resistance so that one's susceptibility is greatly lessened.

Out of door exercise, plenty of rest and sleep, warm clothing, a well-balanced diet, and immediate care when one has been exposed to cold or wet will do much to keep the body in good health and with a reserve supply of strength and resistance.

Swollen, red, "runny" noses and "teary" eyes do not contribute to one's attractiveness, to say nothing of the miserable feeling which they indicate. To avoid such unpleasantness try following a few simple health rules such as these: Sleep at least eight hours each night in a room well ventilated; get as much out of door exercise as possible, preferably in the sunshine; brush the teeth twice daily and visit the dentist semi-annually to arrest any dental caries and thus prevent poisons arising from tooth decay from infecting the blood; include in the daily diet fruits, two vegetables (one green or yellow leafy variety), and a quart of milk; several times a week include eggs and cheese; eat as little rich or greasy foods as possible.

Parents Urged to Take Own Advice on Milk Drinking

By WALTER W. McLAUGHLIN
Director, Illinois Department of Agriculture

THERE is nothing original in our recommendation that you use more of the milk and dairy products that your Illinois farmers are producing. Ever since the first cow ever lived to swish a tail, fond parents, anxious for their children's success in life have probably been urging little Johnny and Mary to "Drink Your Milk." But now scientists, teachers, and nutritionists are urging those anxious elders to take their own advice. Out of the confusing mass of material on foods recommended for health this fact of milk's paramount importance seems to be one of the few on which they all agree.

WALTER W. McLAUGHLIN, DIRECTOR, ILLINOIS DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Of course those early parents only guessed that milk was good for them. We today know why this is so. In the sober, scientific language of such unchallenged nutritional authorities as Professor H. C. Sherman of Columbia University, here is one of the most important reasons why, for the best health, the American people should drink more milk: "Milk is the cheapest and surest protection from the nutritional deficiencies which open the way to diseases and life-long injuries to health, happiness and working efficiency."

Perhaps the most important single element in milk that contributes toward this end, is that mineral which is one of the most necessary substances and one of the most neglected in the American diet, a mineral which cannot be taken into the body in adequate quantities in any food except milk. This mineral is calcium, without which teeth and bones cannot be properly formed and maintained, or the best health enjoyed.

Milk Helps "Preserve Characteristics of Youth."

Another essential element which is best secured in milk is that Vitamin G, which has so much to do with the "preservation of the characteristics of youth."

And for housewives milk has another very distinct advantage—as a time-saver in the business of preparing three meals a day, for as a beverage it requires no preparation. By the simple gesture of pouring it into a glass, the housewife has gone a long way toward preparing a complete, refreshing meal. And it makes the preparation of other foods easier by improving their flavor, making them go further, and completing their food value. Cream soups, creamed vegetables, custards, frozen desserts, milk drinks—all these are popular dishes which could not be made without milk. And you don't need to worry about heat or cold affecting the vitamins in this food. Boil it or freeze it. Still you'll have all but a small fraction of its original food value.

Their Telephone Service 102 Years

Upper: R. P. Pryor.
Lower: F. J. Hanley

When Richard P. Pryor retired from his work with the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company last fall, he had completed 52 years and seven months of telephone service and had established a new employment record in the telephone service in New England. Mr. Pryor started his telephone career in 1881, when he got a job as office boy with the Telephone Despatch Company in Boston. During the early years of the development of the business he served at various times as operator, installer, switchman, lineman, inspector, foreman and manager. In later years he supervised many of the mechanical improvements which have been introduced.

A record which may yet equal Mr. Pryor's is that of Frank J. Hanley, of the New Jersey Bell Telephone Company, who last fall received at the hands of Chester I. Barnard, president of the company, a diamond-studded emblem symbolizing a full half century of service. Mr. Hanley started as a messenger boy in Newark, became an operator—operators were boys in those days—and then chief operator of the Newark exchange. Later he became wire chief for Newark and Orange, and for a number of years has been a test deskman for that area.

SERVICE QUICKLY RESTORED AFTER FLAMES RAZE TOWN

When the city of Ellsworth, Me., suffered a disastrous fire not long ago, the telephone central office, which is an important toll center for a large area, was among the first buildings to fall prey to the flames. Also, the telephone office was perhaps the first to be re-established in temporary quarters.

While the flames still raged, a new location for the telephone office was found, and before the fire was out telephone engineers were making a layout for the cable extension for the new location and a conduit crew was hard at work in the street. Cable and construction work was rushed and the telephone company was ready to provide service at the earliest possible moment.

Even prior to that, emergency quarters were obtained in the fine old house of Mrs. P. J. Phillips, an aunt of Phillips Lord of radio fame, who has built many of his programs around rural life in that section of Maine. Mrs. Phillips graciously permitted the telephone folks the use of a downstairs room. Booths were placed on the large piazza and a squad of Boy Scouts volunteered to relay messages from out of town to various persons, or call them to the telephones that had been set up there, in case the call was of an emergency nature.

CALLS FROM ABROAD MARK FAMILY CHRISTMAS DINNER

Last Christmas will not soon be forgotten by the members of the Mitchell and King families, who were in Chicago, and who gathered for Christmas dinner at the home of William H. Mitchell in Lake Forest. What made the event so notable was that telephone calls to Paris, London and Pasadena brought the voices of absent members to the Lake Forest celebrants. The first call made was to London, when John Payne Kellogg, Mr. Mitchell's brother-in-law, spoke to his father, John P. Kellogg, Sr. The call to Paris was from Mr. Mitchell's aunt to her daughter, Mrs. Walter Dillingham. The Pasadena call was made by Mrs. Robert Hunter.

Out of the Fountain of Youth

RE-ADJUST DIETS FOR HOLIDAY MEALS

IN JUST a few weeks the holiday season will be at hand again and with it the usual array of festive foods and special seasonal delicacies. Many persons who have more or less rigidly followed a reducing diet will find the temptation just a bit too much. Along about the first of the year the scales will tell the story of those who fell from grace in the matter of reducing diets.

Of course, with a table just groaning under its load of delicious edibles, it is hard to resist. One really can't be expected to. However, there are ways in which the additional food can be assimilated without resulting in too much excess poundage.

First of all, more exercise out of doors in the bracing air, long walks, or romps in the snow will help use up the extra calories. If a particularly heavy dinner is planned, breakfast and luncheon can be made comparatively light meals. If one meal is to consist of many starchy or rich foods, menus for the other meals during the day can be built of fruits and vegetables, soups and milk. Because of the low-calorie count of fresh pasteurized milk and the large vitamin and mineral content, it is an excellent way to cut down on calories and still keep up one's energy.

EVERY DAY BRINGS CHANCE FOR HEALTH

"IF ONLY I had it to do over again! To be able to start out with a clean slate . . ."

Frequently one wishes in vain for the opportunity. In the matter of good health and a lovely complexion it is possible to start again—to wipe out all the old faults of diet and complexion care, and to begin an entirely new treatment. Of course, when a well-balanced diet, rich in vitamins and mineral content, is substituted for a poor one, the results are not startlingly evident in a day or two. However, following a carefully planned diet and getting plenty of exercise and rest, will show immediate results in the general feeling of health and renewed vigor of the body. In a short time the results will show also in the heightened color and clearness of the complexion.

Better health will mean more spring in one's step, more erect carriage, sparkling eyes, lovelier hair. Before long, a feeling of poise and assurance will be reflected in the way the clothes are worn and in the way one is ready to face each day full of pep. It is often said that a new hat will do wonders for the mental state of a woman. "Try the effect of a lovely complexion or a new brand of energy. Instead of 'What a pretty hat,' you'll find people saying, 'How nice that hat looks on you!'"

Must Buy State Auto License By First of the Year

Distribution of the first batch of Illinois 1935 automobile license plates was started Tuesday of this week.

Sale of plates "over the counter" began Thursday. They may be purchased either at the Springfield office in the State Capitol or at the automobile division of the Chicago office at 120 South Ashland Boulevard.

Machinery for turning out the license plates, registration cards and certificates of title, has been geared up to top speed for the big job of taking care of around 1,500,000 Illinois motorists, and from now on for many weeks to come, it will demand the exclusive attention of the secretary's auto staff.

The 1935 plates have marine blue figures and letters on a field of battleship gray. The plates are the same plate size as last year but the inscription "Illinois, 1935" is at the top of the numerals, the reverse of last year. Plates are of 31 gauge steel and average about one pound in weight.

Heretofore plates have not been released to the public until around the first of the year. This year Secretary Hughes sent out applications the first of November and persons requesting re-assignment of their present numbers were given a month in which to do so.

The staff of Secretary Hughes also reports that many motorists are under the impression that they are required to buy a new certificate of title this year and are adding 50c to their regular fee for this purpose. Secretary Hughes points out that the present titles are good for the life of the car or until it passes into the hands of a new owner.

Application blanks for the new licenses may be obtained at the News-Bulletin office.

Final Hog Count

In 1934 Program

Began This Week

Final steps of the 1934 corn-hog program in Will county were launched this week when 22 field supervisors began making the last inspection on the 1502 farms in this county covered by AAA contracts.

On November 27 officials of the Will County Corn-Hog Control Association were called to a AAA district conference in Dixon, Illinois where they were given instructions relative to making the final inspections by Ernest D. Walker of the state compliance director's office located at the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.

Those who attended the district conference from this county were Byron Gaskill, Joliet, president; Ralph Mather, Plainfield and Geo. Haines, Crete, members of allotment committee and Marda Dillon, Joliet, secretary.

The final hog benefit payments for the 1934 program which will total approximately $70,000, less local administrative expenses, for contract signers in this county become payable on or about February 1, 1935. However, before the Secretary of Agriculture will release the checks he must receive a certificate from the county association signifying that the respective cooperators have complied with the terms of the AAA contract.

Those who are assisting in this final check on compliance are in the main, the same field supervisors who measured the corn fields and contracted acres during the first corn-hog inspection last September and October. Byron Gaskill of Joliet is directing the compliance check in this county.

CHAIR BACK AND ARM REST DESIGN

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

"Tulip" Chair Back and Arm Rests; Three-Piece Set in Filet Crochet.

Chair backs and arm rests in crochet have been used for generations and are today again very popular for practical and decorative purposes.

How much more inviting is a chair that has this added personal touch and in a design that stands out clearly on a dark background.

This set in a conventional tulip design is easy work even for the inexperienced. The large filet stitch being used makes the work interesting, and a surprisingly short time is required to finish the set. It is an attractive addition to your living room or a valued gift for a friend.

The chair back measures 10 by 14 inches, the arm rests 6 by 10 inches if crocheted with a fairly tight stitch.

A looser stitch will produce a larger size. This package, No. 705, contains sufficient cream-colored Mountain Craft Crochet Cotton to complete this three-piece set, also crochet hook. Instructions are included, also a black and white diagram of the design so the meshes may be easily counted.

Write our crochet department, enclosing 40 cents for this complete package, No. 705, which contains sufficient thread to make this beautiful set, or send 10 cents for the instructions and diagram only.

As He Understood Song

Curtis, who has just passed the five-year mark, is getting a big kick out of kindergarten. His parents have been amused at the enthusiasm with which he has entered into the activities of the class, even though he occasionally has not fully understood what they were all about. He likes the games and drawing lessons, but his real delight is the music. Every day he has come home singing a new song, or snatches of it. Recently he astonished his parents by lustily singing a refrain that sounded familiar, but whose words were strangely twisted.

"What's that you're singing, Curtis?" his mother asked.

"Here We Go Around the Mulberry Bush," replied Curtis, who hadn't encountered mulberry bushes in his short lifetime.—New York Sun.

SYNOPSIS

Prudence Schuyler comes to Prosperity Farm, inherited from her uncle, to make a new life for herself and her brother, David, his health broken by tragedy. The second day on her farm Prue falls from the barn loft into the arms of Rodney Gerard, rich young man, a neighbor. There is at once a mutual attraction, but Prudence suspects men since her sister's husband ran away with her brother's wife, Len Calloway tries to buy Prue's timber, but she contracts with Rod to dispose of the trees. David comes to the farm. A clown appears, advertising a circus in a nearby town. Prue accompanies Rod and Jean to the show. Chicot, an old clown, is accidentally killed. He was the grandfather of Milly Gooch, one of the circus riders. Rod became friendly with Milly when she lived on Prosperity Farm. Calloway intimidates available laborers so that they cannot be hired to cut the timber for Rodney. Gerard, Milly Gooch broke her engagement to Calloway; he believes Rod was the cause and has since been his enemy. After the accident to Chicot, Rod calls on Milly to see if he can be of any help. Prue hardens herself still more against Rod when she sees in the newspaper a flashlight picture of him with Milly.

CHAPTER VII

With sighs of relaxation Gerard and Armstrong, in the tweeds in which they had come from a long day in the woods, settled into deep chairs before the fire in the library at High Ledges and lighted their pipes.

"I'll say I started something when I set out to thin my woods!" Gerard said. "I thought that all that was necessary was to chop down a few trees and there we were. Now it seems that I have embarked on a life work. Puffer was to report on the labor question this afternoon. There he is now! That's Si's voice when he is excited. It doesn't sound good to me. Come in, Si."

Puffer stood in the doorway. He chuckled.

"Howdy, Jim! Don't have to ask how you two are, Rod. Kinder beat out, ain't ye?"

Gerard pulled himself stiffly to his feet and drew an inviting chair nearer the fire. "All right, old-timer, shoot."

"No use beatin' 'bout the bush. I've been to every village within a hundred miles an' I can't get a man to work for ye, Rod. They're afraid of Calloway. I guess we're up against it, all right."

"We can't be up against it, Si. That timber must be cut. I'll find some huskies somewhere who haven't sold out body and soul to Len Calloway. Do we need skilled lumbermen, Jim?"

"No. Skilled labor would save time and money, but with you and Puffer and me to boss a crew we could get the wood out."

Patch, the butler, appeared at the door.

"Miss and Mr. Schuyler."

Gerard doubted his ears. Prue here! He heard Jean's ecstatic, "Oh goody!" as he crossed the room to welcome the girl and her brother. His lips tightened at the hostility in her eyes as they met his. It was abundantly evident that he was still in disgrace for his passionate outburst of yesterday. With difficulty he kept his voice steady.

"This is a clear case of thought transference. How did you know that we need your advice and your brother's at this very moment, Prue? Come over by the fire, Dave."

Schuyler laughed. "How you all conspire to spoil me! We are not so neighborly as we seem. We were driven here for shelter."

Prudence smiled radiantly at Armstrong, and explained:

"Dave and I have been to the village to barter eggs and poultry for groceries. Just as we reached this drive, Success belied her name and passed out. I didn't dare let Dave sit in the cold car—it is beginning to snow—while I probed for internal disturbances; he flatly refused to leave me in the dark road—he had the escaped convict on his mind—so here we are. Now that he is warm and comfy, perhaps you will come out with me, Jim, and help diagnose the engine trouble."

Gerard spoke to the man who had been laying wood on the fire.

"Patch, tell Judkins to look over Miss Schuyler's car. When he has it in shape, let me know."

He turned to Prudence. "Your arrival is uncannily opportune, partner. Jim, Si, and I have struck a snag."

"All is not serene on the logging front?" Prudence asked anxiously.

"Calloway again? I hope you haven't permanently incurred that man's enmity because you are helping us."

"That's only a little gas spilled on the fire, Dave. Len is drunk with the idea of his importance in this community."

Hands clasped on her knees, Prudence leaned forward. "It makes me see fiery pinwheels in frenzied revolution when I think of Calloway's power. He will find that I won't stand being dictated to."

Gerard's relief left him limp for an instant. Yesterday she had been strong for Len. Had she been putting up a bluff to defy the man who had kissed her, or had Calloway chopped off his own head by a stupid move? Whatever the explanation, the fact remained that she was still relying upon the original plan for getting out her timber.

"Jim, suppose no one here will work for us? What shall we do?"

Gerard's recent satisfaction burned up in anger. She was deliberately ignoring him. He cut in:

"We'll have to hire men from outside the state. I'm going to New York tomorrow to try my luck there."

"New York!" David Schuyler repeated thoughtfully. "What sort of men do you need for the work in the woods, Rodney?"

"Husky lads. Jim will do the head work and Si and I will drive the crew," Gerard answered.

"We need men who can swing an ax and cut as we direct," Armstrong elaborated.

"You said you were going to New York to look for them. I have been thinking—"

"If you have a suggestion, for Pete's sake, don't hold out on us, Dave!"

"It may not be worth the breath to state it, Rodney. I was wondering if some of the men at the Rescue mission might not fit in. They're a rough lot, but there are about twenty of them who are devoted to me. If they came, I could keep them straight while they worked. I think, but where would they live? The villagers wouldn't take them in; I wouldn't ask it."

Gerard did a sum in lightning calculation. "They could live in the big cattle barn down by the pond. I'll have bunks built, wood stoves would heat it, and get a cook from New York to feed them. Whoops! I believe you've solved the problem! I'll pay any wages you say—providing, of course, my partner approves the plan."

Prudence shook her head. "The plan is all right, but you must make allowance for the fact that Dave believes that his boys like 'all God's chillen got wings' when they are exposed to the right spiritual conditions."

Her brother's fine eyes were alight with enthusiasm.

"You're wrong, Prue, they have more sporting spirit than you think. Most of them never have had a chance. Suppose we set three or four permanently on their feet and incidentally get the timber out. Wouldn't that be worth while? What say, Gerard?"

"I think it's keen. Give me a letter to the head of the Rescue mission and I will go to New York tomorrow."

"I'll go with you."

"David!"

"Don't spike our plan, Prue, with fear for me. I must be sure that the boys understand the proposition. Don't make an invalid of me. I'm through with that. I'm going."

"Of course, if that's the way you feel about it, Dave, who am I to stand in your way?"

"Glad you realize your unimportance, Prue." Her brother smiled at her.

"Shall we go tomorrow, Rodney?" His voice had the eagerness of a boy's about to fare forth on an adventure.

"Yes. Perhaps you'll come and see us off?" Gerard's eyes were on Prudence. Jean caught his arm.

"You couldn't take me, could you, Uncle Rod? This house will seem awful big without you." She swallowed hard.

"Let Jean come and stay with me."

"Oh, Uncle Rod, may I stay with Miss Prue while you're away? I'll be as good as gold."

"Do you really want her?" For the first time since she had entered the room Gerard felt that Prudence looked at him. "Just a moment, K. K. Do you really want her, Prue?"

"Of course I want her."

"Okay then. Come over and see off your brother, Prue, then Jim will drive you and Jean back to the red brick house."

"The car is in running order, sir," announced Patch.

"Then we must go at once, Dave. Jane Mack will think we have been held up by that prisoner who escaped day before yesterday. I wish you success, Mr. Gerard, but just wait till you see Terry McGowan and Shance O'Shea. I tremble to think what the villagers will say when they see that colorful and hear that profane aggregation which you are planning to hurl into their unsuspecting midst."

"I guess if you and Rod can stand them, Dave, the rest of us can," encouraged Si Puffer. "Most of us are all-fired sick of Calloway and his tootin'." His father was a big man in the community, but the son—well, whatta mean is, I don't wonder that Milly Gooch—"

His eyes met Gerard's. "Gorry-me, I guess I better get a move on and measure that cattle barn right off so's we can get those bunks in."

As he left the room, Gerard turned to look at Prudence, who was talking gaily with Jim Armstrong. Something in the bend of his friend's head tightened a band around Rodney's heart.

As Armstrong crossed the room to speak to David Schuyler, Rodney's hands tightened on Prudence's shoulders.

"Just a minute, girl. I know why you are flirting so outrageously with Jim, but has it occurred to you that what may be fun to you may prove a knockout for him?"

Prudence twisted free and asked with suspicious sweetness:

"Suppose I am not flirting?"

"Dark, isn't it? Pitch-black roads must be a state of Maine specialty," Prudence commented, as she bent forward to look through the windshield against which an occasional big snow flake splashed and melted. "Tomorrow you will be winging to New York. Jean and I will hie us to the post office daily for letters."

"We'll keep you informed as to progress. I'm glad you asked Jean to stay with you. That girl is growing a soul."

"Curious that she has so little love for either of her parents. Usually a child adores one of them."

"Have you heard anything about her father which sounds lovable? As for her mother—she is the type of know-it-all females who fires me with a desire to hurl something at her, preferably something that will squash. Know the urge?"

"To a quiver. It's wonderful to hear you laugh again."

"It is a sound to which you will get accustomed from now on. When I opened my eyes this morning, it seemed as if I emerged from a smothering fog into light and life—full, vigorous, courageous life—with a renewed assurance of the indestructibility of the human soul. Through the corridors of

"What do you think of the critics of your plan?"

"I resent them," answered Senator Sorghum.

"Haven't they any good ideas?"

"Oh, yes. I may utilize some of them. Nevertheless, I don't propose to encourage the nerve they show in expressing them."

Resented Imputation

Specialist—This eccentricity you speak of in your daughter—isn't it, after all, a matter of heredity?

Mother (severely)—No, sir! I'd have you to know there never was any heredity in our family!

Bill—He didn't say.—Exchange.

TWO THICKNESSES

"Are you and Tommie as thick as ever?"

"Thick? Why, that boy is too thick for me to ever get thick with him."

Disappointment

"Yes, that's the worst of it," replied the wanderer sourly; "I am on a diet and can't eat any meat!"—Pathfinder Magazine.

Hard Luck Story

Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Ambition

He—I'd like to write the most popular book of the day.

She—You think that is the way to fame?

He—I don't give a hoot for the fame, it is the way to fill a pocket-book, and that's what interests me.

Cash Wanted

"Pay your taxes with a smile," advised Mrs. Gotrocks.

"I should love to," said Miss Comeley, "but they insist on cash."

Two-Piece Frock in Smart Design

PATTERN 2030

It suggests a suit in its trim lines and neat tailored finish. The yoke extends down the front to the edge of the jacket in a vest effect from under which a belt partly encircles the waistline. The bow at the neck is extremely attractive in velvet. Think of it in rust color with the frock in two shades of green. With the diagrammed sewing chart which accompanies the pattern, even a young girl can easily make the frock.

Pattern 2030 is available in sizes 10, 12, 14, 16 and 18. Size 12 takes 2½ yards 54-inch fabric, and 1½ yards 4-inch ribbon.

"But, daddy, I want to go into training at once."

"How so?"

"Well, I want a dollar a day for ice cream so that I can get accustomed to the cold."

Suspicious

The maid was cleaning the stairs the morning following a wedding reception, and picked up a spoon.

"Some guest must have had a hole in his pocket," she observed.—Ot tawa Citizen.

Her View of It

He—Would you marry for money?

She—Well, a husband with no money to me would be like a garage with no car in it.

ALL IN ORDER

Bug Railroad President—Well, I declare, there's a block system all ready for our new road.

Old-Fashioned Phrase

"Does your parrot talk?"

"Yes; he says 'I beg your pardon.'"

Old Gentleman—Didn't I give you a dime just now in the High street?

Tramp—Yes, sir; I've got a branch office there.

Bakeries Rank Ninth Among Canada's Trades; Are Paid $15,000,000 in Wages

The days when every thrifty housewife baked her own bread have gone into history. In the early settlement of Canada home bread making was almost universal, but now there are comparatively few localities which are not served by the commercial bakery.

A return issued by the Canadian government bureau of statistics indicates the commercial importance of the bread making and allied industries. Statistics were gathered from more than 2,800 firms, not including hotels, restaurants and public institutions which bake their own bread. The industry is found to rank ninth in value of products made and fifth in the amount of salaries and wages paid; the capital invested amounts to nearly $50,000,000, and over $15,000,000 is paid in wages and salaries.

The consumption of material, most of which is produced in Canada, amounts to $23,431,275. The products are classified as: Bread, valued at $40,110,843; pies, cakes, cookies and pastry, $9,978,733, and buns, $2,463,042. To produce these quantities of food required more than 1,000,000 pounds of butter, nearly 5,000,000 dozen eggs, over 3,000,000 barrels of flour, over 8,000,000 pounds of fruit and about the same quantity of lard, and 25,000,000 pounds of sugar.
